From the legendary Green Berets to the highly skilled Rangers and Airborne Infantry, this book provides an unprecedented glimpse into the capabilities, equipment, and training that make them the most feared fighting force on the planet.

Special Forces

The Green Berets, known officially as Special Forces, are the Army's premier unconventional warfare unit. They specialize in conducting operations deep behind enemy lines, often working with foreign allies to train and equip local forces. Green Berets are renowned for their mastery of foreign languages, cultural sensitivity, and ability to adapt to any environment.

One of the most famous Green Beret operations was the raid on the Iranian Embassy in Tehran in 1980. In a daring mission to rescue American hostages, a team of Green Berets scaled the embassy walls and engaged in intense close-quarters combat, ultimately failing to secure the hostages but demonstrating their unwavering bravery and combat prowess.

Rangers

The Rangers are the Army's premier light infantry unit, specializing in raiding, seizing objectives, and conducting other specialized missions.

They are known for their ability to deploy quickly, strike with overwhelming force, and adapt to changing circumstances on the battlefield.

Rangers often conduct operations in conjunction with other elite units, such as Special Forces and SEALs. Their versatility and capabilities make them a valuable asset in a wide range of combat scenarios, from counterterrorism operations to urban warfare.

Rangers are trained to conduct amphibious operations, allowing them to deploy in a variety of coastal and inland environments.

Airborne Infantry

The Airborne Infantry are the Army's paratroopers, specializing in deploying behind enemy lines and seizing key objectives. They are trained to operate independently for extended periods, relying on their own resources and specialized skills to complete their missions.

Airborne Infantry units have played a crucial role in numerous historical conflicts, including the D-Day landings in Normandy during World War II. They continue to be an essential part of the Army's arsenal, providing a rapid and flexible response to threats around the world.

Training and Equipment

The elite forces of the Army Ground Assault are equipped with the most advanced weapons, vehicles, and technology available to the military. They undergo rigorous training to master their skills and maintain their combat readiness.

Special Forces soldiers, for example, receive specialized training in weapons, explosives, communications, and language proficiency. They are also trained in close-quarters combat, survival techniques, and medical skills.

Rangers and Airborne Infantry units receive similar training, with a focus on their respective specialized roles. Rangers emphasize raiding and seizing objectives, while Airborne Infantry units focus on parachuting and operating behind enemy lines.

Legacy of Excellence

The elite forces of the Army Ground Assault have a long and distinguished history of service to the United States. They have fought in every major conflict since World War II, earning a reputation for valor, skill, and unwavering dedication.

From the beaches of Normandy to the mountains of Afghanistan, these soldiers have demonstrated their ability to overcome any challenge and accomplish the most demanding missions. They are the embodiment of the Army's motto: "This We'll Defend."
