About Carly Fiorina

Carly Fiorina is a business executive and politician. She was the CEO of Hewlett-Packard from 1999 to 2005. Fiorina was the first woman to lead a Fortune 20 company. She was also the Republican nominee for U.S. Senate in California in 2010 and a candidate for the Republican presidential nomination in 2016.

Fiorina was born in Austin, Texas, in 1954. She earned a bachelor's degree in philosophy from Stanford University and a master's degree in business administration from the Massachusetts Institute of Technology. Fiorina began her career at AT&T, where she worked for 12 years. In 1999, she was hired as the CEO of Hewlett-Packard. Fiorina's tenure at Hewlett-Packard was marked by both successes and failures. She oversaw the company's acquisition of Compaq Computer Corporation in 2002, which was the largest merger in technology history at the time. However, she was also criticized for her handling of the company's merger with Compaq and for her decision to outsource jobs overseas. Fiorina was fired from Hewlett-Packard in 2005.

After leaving Hewlett-Packard, Fiorina became active in politics. She ran for the U.S. Senate in California in 2010 but lost to Democratic incumbent Barbara Boxer. Fiorina ran for the Republican presidential nomination in 2016 but dropped out of the race after finishing sixth in the Iowa caucuses.

Fiorina is a controversial figure. She has been praised for her business acumen and her willingness to take risks. However, she has also been criticized for her management style and her political views.
